Challenging Convention

► a story of progress

During a brainstorming session on new product ideas, we raised a number of simple, yet thought provoking questions about standard Travel Trailer design.

- Why waste three feet of the frame at the front of a travel trailer?
- Why build travel trailers with a wind deflecting, flat front wall?
- Why place the LP bottles exposed on the front frame where they become dented and rusted?
- Why use 30 pound bottles when they are heavy and have to be refilled instead of exchanged?
- Why use narrow axles which cause the unit to sway while being towed?

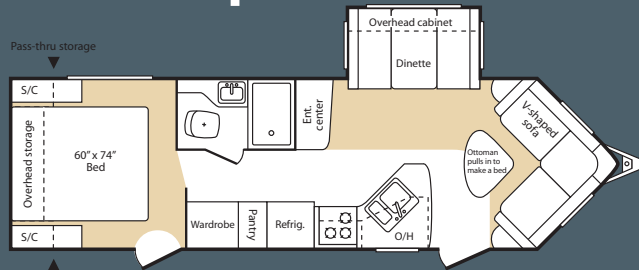

VR1 realized the answers to these questions were obvious and it was time to rethink the conventional design used for the past forty years.

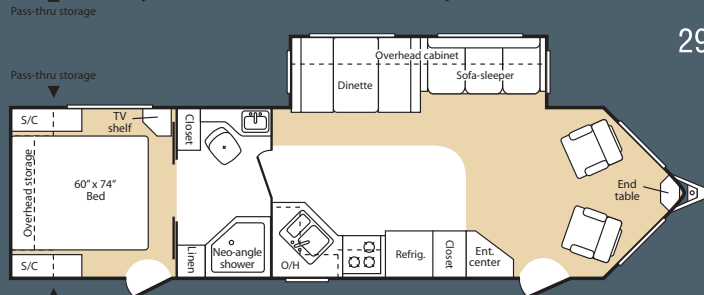

After two years of designing, engineering, and thorough testing, Keystone RV has developed the most aerodynamic, easy-to-tow and spacious travel trailer on the road.
